One Year Forecasts predict the probability that a stock-market will rise over the next year. Investors should seek to invest in markets with forecasts of 60-100%, while avoiding markets with forecasts of 0-40%. Bullish = Favourable. Bearish = Unfavourable.

Stockmarket Outlook

World stockmarkets have weakened a little over the last couple of months but there is no reason to believe this is more than a short term correction in a longer term - but relatively slow - uptrend. Our One-Year Stockmarket Forecasts remain generally Bullish (i.e. favourable).

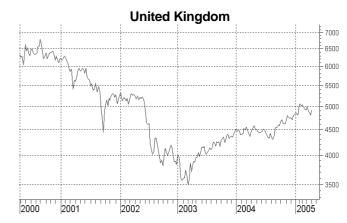

The world economy is likely to continue to grow at a slower rate - resulting in slow growth in the value of stockmarkets. There are, of course, a number of global imbalances that will cause uncertainty and shocks along the way. The United States continues to consume too much and save too little - placing a financing burden on the rest of the world. Over-consumption will continue to place pressure on the US dollar over the very long term - and the weak dollar and the external financing requirement will eventually lead foreign creditors to demand higher interest rates to compensate for the exchange rate losses.

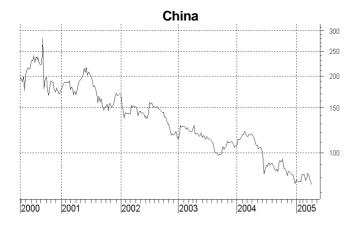

The other side of the global equilibrium is balanced by under-consumption and over-investment in Asia and China. Over the last few years, consumption has been rising in many Asian countries and this is creating growth as the economies expand to meet domestic demand rather than to produce additional exports. China, however, continues to over-invest significantly but is still in the early stages of development.

So over the decades ahead this global imbalance will resolve itself through lower consumer spending and a return to some positive level of savings in the United States - either voluntarily or forced upon it by a low dollar and high interest rates. Overall, US economic growth rates will be significantly lower than the rest of the world. Low economic growth and the interest rate and currency risks make the United States relatively unattractive for stockmarket investment.

Development in Asia will result in economic growth rates higher than in the rest of the world - so this should be the most attractive region for investment. In the early stage of development, however, stockmarket investments can be limited (e.g. most businesses in China are owned by large foreign companies) and stockmarket listed companies often lack protection for minority shareholders. There are, however, many stockmarket investments in the Asian region (excluding China) and these markets will become less dependent upon the boom/bust export cycle as domestic consumption expands and drives economic growth.

Recommended International Investment Funds

Fund Reports

Schroder Asia Pacific Fund plc performed well in the six months to March 2005, with Asian markets rising owing to strong economies driven by domestic demand. The fund has taken profits following the strong rise in domestic Korean stocks and re-invested in Taiwan shares where prices have declined despite increasing dividend payouts by many companies.

The Manager sees a number of negative short term factors - rising US interest rates and tighter liquidity - but remains optimistic about the long term potential of Asian stockmarkets. The portfolio will continue to over-weight in India, Indonesia and Hong Kong, and to "favour domestic growth oriented sectors and stocks".

Invesco Japan Discovery Trust plc under-performed its benchmark index by a few percentage points over the six months to the end of January 2005. The Fund Manager blames this on "Japanese investors focusing on value stocks with good dividend yields" while the fund "continues to invest in high growth companies, being confident that the value of strong earnings growth will deliver better rewards" to shareholders. The Fund Manager believes that "the market outlook remains encouraging in the longer term".

JPM Fleming European Fledgeling Investment Trust plc re-purchased 435,000 shares at 352 pence. This leaves an issued capital of 53,131,517 shares.
