World Stockmarket Outlook

The United States economic growth rate has been accelerating for eight consecutive quarters! That is a very long time. It is also an environment that strongly favoured Technology shares and other "growth" type investments. It is therefore not surprising that these shares have boomed over the last two years while other sectors (e.g. "value" investments) have been out of favour, neglected and are now looking under-valued.

It is now very likely that US economy growth rates will start to decline. Note that we are not suggesting negative growth and a recession, just slower and declining rates of positive economic growth. That, however, could have a significant impact on both "growth" stock valuations (i.e. negative) and "value" investments (i.e. positive).

Technology and other growth company investments have risen strongly both reflecting the impact of strong economic growth on their current revenues and profits, but also by the impact of the accelerating growth on expectations for high growth rates for their future revenues and profits.

And with all the hot money flowing into booming Technology and "growth" company shares, slower growing "value" company shares have fallen out of favour, under-performed and become under-valued.

With slower economic growth, Technology and "growth" investments will report slower revenue and profit growth over the next several quarters. Expectations for future growth will also be scaled back from current over-optimistic levels. Both factors could see stock valuations in these high growth sectors fall back significantly.

There could also be a "rotation", with Utilities, Real Estate, Oil and other higher yielding "value" type investments likely to be re-rated higher over the next couple of years.

Global economic growth rates are already slowing. There are economic problems developing in China, and other Emerging Markets are also sensitive to slower growth.

Slower global economic growth is highly correlated with US dollar strength. When global growth is accelerating, investors buy riskier global assets and sell US dollars and US investments. When growth slows, investors sell global assets and buy US dollars and US investments. This is the "safe haven" impact on the US dollar exchange rate - but it is not driven by political uncertainty or inflation but changes in the rate of global economic growth.

It is also likely that US interest rates will fall slightly over the next year - which would boost the value of higher yielding stocks - although the reasons for our interest rate view is a little counter-intuitive.

Currently there is a very high expectation that the Federal Reserve will raise interest rates at least four times (i.e. very aggressively raise rates) over the next year. That widely anticipated increase in the Federal interest rate is therefore likely to be already fully reflected in market interest rates (i.e. long term corporate bond and treasury bond rates). If the market has already priced in this expectation, then the actual Federal Reserve increases will have little or no impact on market interest rates ... and if the economic growth rate slows then the Federal Reserve will likely raise rates less than is currently expected (i.e. perhaps only two or three times). If the actual Federal Reserve interest rates rates rates rates rates use then market interest rates will eventually fall slightly to reflect this new information.

Summary and Recommendation

Investment management is not about wild swings from bullish one month to bearish the next, but about making small portfolio changes (or a series of small changes) as the outlook slowly evolves. Being fully invested in growth shares and emerging markets has been successful over recent years but it may be time to take a slightly more cautious approach for the immediate future.

Therefore we are recommending that investors reduce exposure to China and Emerging Markets, re-investing in lower risk US Property and US Utility "value" shares. This will also give us a US dollar exposure at a time when that currency is likely to appreciate in value.

Redeem Janus Henderson China Opportunities Fund.

We recommend redeeming the units in Janus Henderson China Opportunities Fund to reduce our exposure to Chinese equities. This has nothing to do with tariffs but the deteriorating current economic performance as well as a changed political situation that creates higher risks and lower potential investment returns, making China less attractive for long term investment.

For over a decade, China has been building "ghost cities" that remained empty. This is driven by a number of factors. Local governments can acquire collectively own rural land, rezone it as urban construction land and onsell to developers at up to 40 times the value! Developers are required to build within a very short time frame and cannot wait to pre-sell or until there is a demand for the apartments or offices being constructed. State owned banks provide the finance. Why does this work? Chinese local governments earn 40% of their revenues from land sales. The construction counts towards GDP growth and helps the local and central government meet its growth targets.

(Continued from Page 2) non-income producing real estate. This has required an expansion in bank lending and probably the build up of non-performing loans in the state owned banking sector. There probably isn't reliable data on Chinese nonperforming bank loans, but as the economy slows there will be greater risk of a Chinese banking crisis.

The Chinese economy is slowing. GDP growth is now reported at 6.7% for the year to 30 June 2018. Retail sales are growing 8.5%, the slowest rate in 15 years. The government has released 700 billion yuan (US$107 billion) into the banking system (by cutting reserve requirements) but large banks must use 500 billion yuan to finance debt-for-equity swaps at large state-owned enterprises. Smaller banks have been instructed to use 200 billion yuan to increase lending to small and medium sized businesses.

Taxes have been cut and the currency devalued throughout 2018.

Of course, the Chinese Central Goverment believes it can control the economy and is not subject to "market forces". If you also believe that then perhaps you should look back at how well they "controlled" market forces in the stockmarket during the boom/bust from mid-2014 until mid-2016. We wrote about that in July 2015 (International Investor, Issue 235).

Some of the current slowing in GDP results from a sharp fall in local government spending on infrastructure projects as the central government sought to slow exessive borrowing by local governments!

China is important in the global economy, but we need to be careful not to over-estimate that importance. China will probably never be the great Super Power - partly owing to its one child policy (which achieved a birth rate of 1.60 per woman - not 1.00 - and a moderate gender imbalance in favour of males). 20% of the global population live within China, but while the global population is expected to grow only slowly over the next century, China's population will decline. Its workforce will decline faster and there will be a high dependency ratio (i.e. young and mainly older people relative to the working age population.) in the years ahead.

China's population of 1403.5 million is expected to peak at about 1440 million by 2030 and then decline. By 2075 it is estimated to decline to 1170 million and by 2100 to be around 1020 million. From 20% today, China's share of the global population will decline to 15% by around 2035 and to only about 9% by 2100.

After an unfortunate experience with Mao Zedong, the Chinese Communist Party imposed term limits on its leaders. Mao's "cultural revolution" from 1966 to 1976 is now officially described as a "severe setback". Term limits (i.e. two terms of five years each) were designed to prevent such mistakes and the personality cults.

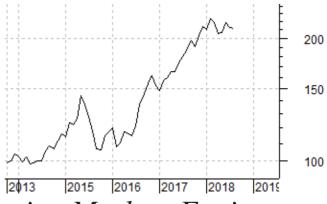

In May 2018, these term limits were removed and Xi Jinping was unanimously reappointed with the right to continue in office for life.

Over the last 25 years the West has welcomed China to the world economy, encouraging its economic integration and hoping to develop a market economy in China. The hope was that as Chinese people grew wealthier they would seek democratic freedom and the rule of law. Now we know that is not going to be the case.

Xi Jinping has sought to maintain the dominance of the Communist Party and his power in that party. "Anticorruption" campaigns have been used to purge potential rivals. The People's Liberation Army was reorganised to ensure its loyalty to the party and himself personally. Censorship prevents criticism of the party or government.

Political control is more important than economic growth or individual freedoms. Businesses do not exist to create wealth but as an arm of state power. If the domestic population does not have freedoms, rights and the protection of the rule of law, then this is not going to be a country that develops shareholder rights for foreign investors! The potential for attractive investment opportunities has diminished while political risks have increased.

Redeem Aberdeen Emerging Markets Equity

Redeem Aberdeen Emerging Markets Equity.

We are recommending the redemption of investments in this unlisted Open Ended Investment Company (OEIC) owing to the potential for a slowdown in economic growth. Emerging Markets can be more sensitive to economic developments and potentially more volatile than other shares. In an economic slowdown, emerging market currencies could also weaken relative to developed countries' currencies and the US dollar.

The trust also has a 20% investment in China.

Redeeming this fund will reduce the overall risk exposure of our international portfolio, which at this stage we plan to re-invest in low risk US Property and Utility shares.

Buy UK listed iShares US Property Yield ETF

BUY UK listed iShares US Property Yield ETF (code IUSP).

We recommend investing in this UK listed exchange traded fund (ETF) which holds shares in over 120 of the largest US based Property Investment companies and Real Estate Investment Trusts (REITs). If global economic growth slows over the next year, then property shares which have recently been neglected (e.g. in favour of high growth technology shares) and are now relatively under-valued could perform strongly. Slower global growth would also lift the US dollar, the currency in which this fund holds its investments.

This "index" fund is domiciled in Ireland (which is tax efficient for non-US investors) and authorised for sale throughout the European Union. The fund actually offer seven classes of share which are identical except that they are priced in different currencies and listed on different stock exchanges. Three classes of share are priced in Euros and listed in Germany, Italy and Amsterdam. A share priced in US dollars is listed in Switzerland. Two classes of shares are listed in the United Kingdom, priced in US dollars and Sterling. The shares are also listed in Mexico and priced in Pesos. Regardless of the currency in which a share is priced and traded, the share classes are identical and all of the fund's investments are in US listed securities. The currency exposure is therefore in US Dollars.

If you have Pounds Sterling in a UK brokerage account then buy the class of shares traded in Pounds Sterling under the code IUSP. The last trade was $\pounds 22.27\frac{1}{2}$.

If you bought the shares traded in US dollars, then your broker will charge a forex fee to settle that trade in Sterling. At Charles Stanley that is 1.0% (i.e. $100 on a $10,000 trade). At Interactive Brokers U$2 plus 0.01% (i.e. about $3 on a $10,000 trade).

These shares are extremely actively traded with a very low bid-offer spread of 0.15% or less (i.e. about $15 between the buy and sell prices on a $10,000 trade). Your broker will also charge a brokerage fee - a flat £11.50 at Charles Stanley or £6.00 at Interactive Brokers (on a trade up to £50,000). There are no stock exchange

"transaction fees" on ETFs.

This "index" fund is very well diversified, with positions in 121 US property companies and REITs. The ten largest positions make up just 36.2% of the portfolio.

The ten largest holdings are: Simon Property Group (7.2% of the portfolio), Prologis REIT (4.6%), Public Storage (4.3%), Digital Realty Trust REIT (3.3%), Avalonbay Communities REIT (3.2%), Equity Residential REIT (3.1%), Welltower Inc (3.1%), Ventas REIT (2.7%), Boston Properties REIT (2.6%) and Realty Income REIT (2.1%). Property investments are in Industrial & Office (28.2% of the portfolio), Retail (23.7%), Specialty (20.7%), Residential (16.5%), Hotels (7.8%) and other (3.1%).

The annual expense ratio (which includes the management fee) is 0.40%. The dividend yield is about 3.3%, paid quarterly. The fund has just declared a quarterly dividend of US$0.2276 and the shares will trade ex-dividend on 16 August (payable 30 August).

Summary and Recommendation

US property shares are a relatively low risk investment. This sector (and other "value" shares) have underperformed the US stockmarket over the last few years, which has been dragged higher by "growth" companies, large technology companies and other cyclical industries. Property shares now offer good value, an attractive current income yield and steady growth potential.

Slower economic growth in the US in the future could likely result in some de-rating of growth shares (i.e. as future growth rates are downgraded) and some revaluation of neglected "value" shares, including property shares.

The global economy is already slowing and this is correlated with US dollar strength. As the global economy slows, money moves to "safe haven" US dollar fixed interest and US investments.

An investment in iShares US Property Yield is therefore a low risk investment that should benefit from slowing economic growth, a stockmarket "rotation" away from "growth" towards "value" investments and from US dollar strength.

Buy UK listed iShares S&P 500 Utilities Sector ETF

BUY UK listed iShares S&P 500 Utilities Sector ETF (code IUSU).

We recommend investing in this UK listed exchange traded fund (ETF) which holds shares in 29 US based Electric Utility companies. US Utility shares fell sharply in value in early 2018 and as economic growth rates decline these high yield, "value" investments could recover and perform strongly. Slower global growth would also lift the US dollar, the currency in which this fund holds investments.

This "index" fund, domiciled in Ireland, offers four classes of share which are identical except that they are priced in different currencies and listed on different stock exchanges. One class of share is priced in Euros and listed in Germany and another priced in US dollars is listed in Switzerland. Two classes of shares are listed in the United Kingdom, priced in US dollars and Sterling. All of the fund's investments are in US listed stocks so the currency exposure is in US Dollars.

If you have Pounds Sterling in a UK brokerage account then buy the class of shares traded in Pounds Sterling under the code IUSU. The last trade was $\pounds 4.22\frac{1}{4}$.

The UK listed class of share traded in US dollars has the very similar code IUUS (US$5.38¹/₄) so take care placing an order.

These shares are extremely actively traded with a bid-offer spread of 0.15% or less.

Page 6 Fund Recommendations

The ten largest holdings are: NextEra Energy (11.6%), Duke Energy (8.2%), The Southern Company (6.9%), Dominion Energy (6.5%), Exelon (6.0%), American Electric Power (5.0%), Sempra Energy (4.5%), Public Service Enterprise Group (4.0%), Consolidated Edison (3.6%) and Xcel Energy (3.4%).

Nearly all of these companies (95.0% of the portfolio) are diversified Electric Utility companies involved in the generation, transmission, distribution and retail sales to businesses and households. One-third of these (32.4% of the portfolio) are also involved in natural gas distribution and retail sales. There is a small investment in independent power producers and energy traders (2.7%) and water utilities (2.2%).

The annual expense ratio (which includes the management fee) is a very low 0.15%. The portfolio produces a Dividend income of about 4.0%, but this is International Investor an "accumulating" fund so the income is not distributed but retained and re-invested to increase the value of the units. New Zealand based investors will be taxed under the 5% assumed income under the "Fair Dividend Rate".

Summary and Recommendation

Electric Utility company shares are a relatively low risk investment, offering attractive income yields and steady long term growth. This sector (and other "value" shares) have under-performed the US stockmarket recently, especially in early 2018.

Slower economic growth in the US in the future could likely result in some "rotation" and revaluation of neglected "value" shares, including Utility shares.

The global economy is already slowing, which should lead to an appreciating US dollar.

An investment in iShares S&P 500 Utilities Sector is therefore a low risk investment that should benefit from slowing economic growth, a stockmarket "rotation" away from "growth" towards "value" investments and from US dollar strength.
