One Year Forecasts predict the probability that a stock-market will rise over the next year. Investors should seek to invest in markets with forecasts of 60-100%, while avoiding markets with forecasts of 0-40%. Bullish = Favourable. Bearish = Unfavourable.

Russian Shares?

Some Russian shares could be attractive investments in the current environment, for investors with widely diversified international portfolios. Of course, this market also involves risks.

While there are clearly political risks, the Russian Rouble is "the world's most undervalued currency". The Economist "Big Mac Index" rates the Rouble as 47% under-valued relative to the US Dollar. So one can buy Russian shares on a very favourable exchange rate (which could appreciate over the longer term).

We don't usually include a chart of average Russian Dividend Yields in our quarterly World Stockmarket Valuations feature, but here is the current information:

Dividend Yields have been above historical levels (showing under-valuation) and rising strongly over recent years but have since fallen back towards recent historical averages (indicating "fair" value).

Covid-19 and low oil prices have cut the profits and dividends of Russian energy companies - which make up about 42% of the market capitalisation (followed by Mining Companies at 21% and Banks/Financials at 21%, with these three sectors making up 84% of the stockmarket). This has reduced government revenues. To partially offset this the government has mandated that listed companies must distribute at least 50% of tax paid profits. The government still owns shares in many listed companies so is seeking to boost its dividend revenue.

While we are cautious about many of these large Energy/Mining/Financial shares there are some individual Russian companies that could be attractive:

In Market Analysis this month we briefly discuss how financial exchanges could be good hedges against inflation. Revenues are usually a small percentage of the financial asset value traded (so should keep pace with inflation) while costs are low and mainly computer hardware (which keeps getting cheaper). The problem is that major exchanges in Western countries are very highly priced. Not so with the Moscow Exchange (code MOEX) which trades on a P/E of 15 and Dividend Yield of 5.5%. The exchange trades equities, bonds, derivatives, forex, money markets, precious metals and grains with many these markets growing rapidly, off a relatively small base. The company also provides clearing and depository services. The stock exchange trades at least 144 foreign shares (i.e. mainly large and popular US stocks). So long term growth could exceed the larger, mature Western exchanges.

RusHydro (code HYDR) could also be attractive. This is Russia's largest power company and the second largest hydroelectric company in the world. Hard assets - like hydro-electric dams and generators - should be a good hedge against inflation and this type of business has low operating costs. In a country that may lack a robust rule of law, there is a risk that insiders will steal the business or company assets. This is more difficult with large, immovable assets (e.g. hydro-electric dams). The company is 66.8% owned by the Federal Agency for State Property Management of the Russian Federation (i.e. the government). HYDR shares trade on a P/E ratio of 5 and Dividend Yield 10.7%.

Another company that warrants attention is Federal Grid Company of Unified Energy System (code FEES). This company owns 142,000 km of major electricity transmission grid in Russia. Again this is a "hard asset" company with low operating costs. The company is 80.13% owned by Rosseti the more labour intensive business that operates and maintains 2.37 million km of smaller power transmission lines. Rosseti is itself 88.0% owned by the Federal Agency for State Property Management of the Russian Federation. Federal Grid shares trade on a P/E of 4 and a Dividend Yield of 7.9%.

Depending upon current year profits, Moscow Exchange and Federal Grid may need to lift their dividends to comply with the Government directive to distribute at least 50% of profits. Russia has a maximum 15% withholding tax on dividends paid to most foreign investors, including New Zealand and Australia.

All three companies are listed and actively traded on the Moscow Exchange, and can be purchased through Interactive Brokers. HYDR and FEES are also listed and trade on the London Stock Exchange (although FEES is not actively traded on that market).

Summary and Recommendation

There are several factors that could make some Russian shares attractive investments:

Firstly, The Russian rouble is under-valued, so foreign investors can purchase Russian shares (i.e. businesses and hard assets) at a favourable exchange rate.

Secondly, the Russian stockmarket - and especially the shares discussed above - offer very high current income yields despite the low yield environment in most other countries globally.

Thirdly, Moscow Exchange, RusHydro and Federal Grid all have businesses and "hard assets" that should do well in an inflationary environment.
